FIRST TO GO.

The honor of being the first man called from Garrard County for service in the National Army went to Benjamin Wood. For a number of years, Ben has dispensed soda to the thirsty, and there is no more popular boy in Lancaster. It is indeed an honor to go first in the battle of the world for democracy.

MOVES TO LEXINGTON

The many friends of Robert T. Embry and his family regret that they will leave Lancaster Friday to take up their permanent residence in Lexington. Mr. Embry has accepted a position in the Bluegrass Metropolis, and his children will enter school there. His eldest son, Bert, will enter the State University this fall. Mr. Embry has been connected with the National Bank here for a number of years, and his position of Assistant Cashier will be filled by Mr. J. Randolph Harris, of Stanford. Mr. Harris is a former resident of Lancaster, being a son of Judge and Mrs. E. W. Harris.

NEW POSTOFFICE.

SOON TO BE REALITY.

Postmaster E. P. Brown is all smiles over the fact that within a year he will be occupying a new postoffice building. All doubts as to the time when it will be completed vanished when the Government awarded the contract for the bare building to A. W. Lane of Chicago for $28,496.00. The contract calls for completion on May 24th, 1918. In all, fifty five thousand dollars will be spent on the Post Office, five thousand having gone for the purchase of the Grant lot on Danville Street, adjoining the Presbyterian Church. It will be one story, with basement, and will contain rooms for the Postmaster, rural carriers, and a vault.

FAREWELL DINNER

Given To Ten Boys Who Leave For Louisville To-morrow.

A farewell dinner was given at the Kengarian hotel last Tuesday, to the ten boys who have the honor of being the first called from this county under the selective draft service.

They are all splendid specimens of manhood and we all know and feel that they will so acquit themselves while in the service, that the entire population of the county, will rise up as a single man and call them blessed. The citizens of the town and community responded liberally towards financing the splendid dinner, although it was gotten up hurriedly, after the message came that they must start for Louisville on the afternoon train to-morrow (Friday) afternoon.

Judge Hardin acted as toastmaster and gave the boys some splendid advice in words that were both eloquent and beautiful.

Short talks were also made by Judge L. L. Walker and J. E. Robinson. On behalf of the boys, our young townsman and good friend, William Swope, more familiarly known here as "Billy" responded in some well chosen words, thanking the host for the dinner served in their honor, and the speakers for the admonition and advice, assuring them that they would be heeded, and that their conduct while in the service, would prove to their Garrard county friends, that they would be loyal to the trust reposed in them. Ed Holtzclaw also responded and his remarks were heartily applauded.

The ten boys who sat at the festal board and who leave to-morrow afternoon are: Ben Wood, Lancaster, James H. Kilsten, Paint Lick, William Swope, Lancaster, Jas. E. Holtzclaw, Gilberts Creek, Chenault Elmore, Lancaster, Mike Simpson, Coy, Hollis Warren, Lancaster, Andrew Benge, Bryantville, William C. Layton, Paint Lick, and Joe Bryant, Lancaster.

Shirley Estes caught some good pictures of the boys just before the luncheon, which we hope to produce in our next issue.

WILLIAM B. MASON JR.

Probably the first Garrard County boy who will see active service in foreign waters will be William B. Mason, of Lancaster, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Mason. He is at this time awaiting orders to proceed to European waters, having volunteered for service on a Submarine chaser. He is at present at Norfolk, a member of the Naval reserve, and has finished his course of training there. "Billy's" many friends here wish him all success, and hope for his safe return.

A LAND SALE WE ARE

MUCH INTERESTED IN.

On next Tuesday at 10 o'clock the Tom Robinson or Sam Cotton place of 125 acres of Blue Grass land in high state of cultivation just one half mile from the City limits of Lancaster will be sold to the highest bidder in small tracts. This is a dandy fine piece of property and with it being cut into small tracts each facing on Stanford pike should readily sell. In as much as the editor owns the adjoining farm we are very much interested to know who our neighbors will be. Now some of you who want a good location for a home go out and look over this property and we feel sure you will not look further for a home site. See big ad in this issue.

FRANCHISE FOR

TELEPHONE SYSTEM.

At the regular meeting of the city council last Monday night the question of selling a telephone franchise was brought up, the Bastin Telephone Company having expressed a desire that such a step be taken. The matter was touched upon at a previous meeting and at the meeting last Monday night more developments were brought out. Mr. Steele, formerly owner of the Hustonville Telephone Company, but now a resident of Danville, expressed to the council that he wished to bid on a franchise, if such one was to be sold. He has promised to submit a franchise at the next regular meeting of the council, for installing a "Central Energy" system, the same as is now used in Danville and other progressive towns, such as Somerset and Burnside. Mr. Creech of the Bastin Telephone Company, was also on hand and said that he would gladly submit a franchise also and one that he felt would be in keeping with the town and community and at a price that he thought would be reasonable to the patrons as well as the owners.

GARRARD FARMS IN GREAT DEMAND.

One can scarcely count on his fingers the number of real estate deals that have been made in this county during the past month, so fast have the changes been and at prices that were never equaled or heard of before. It only shows that Garrard county is coming into her own and is now only reaping a part of the reputation that she has justly made nationally, for the best county in the state when it comes to producing, corn, hemp, tobacco and wheat, products that are in great demand and at fabulous prices. Mr. James I. Hamilton the best judge of the farming lands in the county, during the past month, has purchased, in round numbers, $250,000. worth of farms in the county, at prices from $150 to $200 an acre. A total of eight farms were bought by him during the month of August, three of which he turned over in less than a week after purchasing, for handsome profits.

Being a good judge of the value of Garrard County farms, he will buy one as readily as an ordinary man would a yearling calf and on very few occasions has his good judgement failed him.

The eight farms mentioned above purchased of the following parties: Alex Walker, Mrs. Juliett Barnard, Jim Clark, Shirley Hudson, N. K. Bogie, J. T. Pope, A. H. Bastin and Walker Bros. There are about 1,500 acres in the eight farms.

Their Hero

By RICHARD MARKLEY

One of the idiosyncrasies of youth is an overappreciation of what is pleasing to the eye. A boy of sixteen is more absorbed in the cut of his clothes than ever again in his life. The love of personal adornment is supposed to remain with a woman so long as she lives. Once out of her teens she is woe rather by devotion than good looks. But a girl from fifteen to twenty is as much charmed by what is usually denominated handsome in a boy as the boy is by resplendent neckwear. Neither the boy nor the girl attaches much importance to merit.

Tom Berryman, aged eighteen, the son of a well to do widow, persuaded his mother to permit him to give a house party in her country home, which she did not intend to occupy during the summer. The bunch Tom trained with was composed of boys and girls of ages varying from fourteen to eighteen, though none of the girls was quite seventeen. Six boys and six girls were invited to the house party, and all accepted at once, for none of them had ever been so honored before.

Mrs. Berryman had an intimate friend, a Mrs. Archibald, whose only son, Reginald, was of a proper age to be invited to the house party. Mrs. Berryman, desiring to show attention to her friend, made it a condition of giving up her country house to her son and her friends that Reginald Archibald should receive an invitation to be one of the party.

Tom consented and had been sufficiently trained in social dealings to notify the other boys that Reginald Archibald, being a stranger, should receive especial attention from them. As to the girls, Tom knew that if they did not happen to fancy young Archibald they would not be likely to put themselves out of the way to do him honor.

When Reginald appeared on the scene he was found to be what a girl of sixteen would call handsome. His complexion was pink and white. He was rather tall for his age and delicately formed. He possessed a well turned neck and throat and wore a byronic collar—not at all in fashion—which showed the features to advantage. He at once gave the impression that he honored the company in appearing among them and that he expected to be treated with especial consideration.

As has been remarked, young ladies of sixteen are like the fish that go for the glittering spoon that whirls in the sunshine at the end of a line. Reginald's pink and white complexion, his soft brown eyes, his artistically tumbled hair and, above all, that throat, rising above the broad, rolling collar, captivated every girl in the party. Moreover, his admirers were too young to have received proper training in restraining themselves in such matters, and Mr. Archibald at once became their hero.

Even had the girls refrained from showing their admiration for the youngster with the pink and white complexion the other boys would doubtless have discovered it. They were not envious of him, but his receiving all the attention to the entire exclusion of all the rest of them was certainly calculated to mar the pleasure of the party. No one of them could make an engagement with any girl until she had learned whether Reginald Archibald would honor her with a like invitation. If a boy were chatting with a girl she was forever casting glances at the Adonis, evidently more interested in getting him away from the girl he was with than in her companion.

The longer this concentrated attention of the girls upon him lasted the more Mr. Archibald seemed to consider it a matter of course. Instead of pointing out to the girls the want of wisdom in their course he rather encouraged them in following it. Instead of endeavoring to be one of the party of boys he held aloof from them, seeming to consider the society of girls preferable. On the whole, the young fellows were quite excusable in being up in arms against both the girls and their hero for spoiling their fun.

They put their heads together to concoct some scheme to show up the adorable Adonis and reinstate themselves in the good graces of the girls. They one and all agreed to act on the old saying "Absence makes the heart grow fonder." The result speaks for itself.

One morning when the girls came down to breakfast the butler announced that some of the boys had gone fishing, some to a baseball match. The only boy left at home was their hero. They had him for breakfast, they spent the morning with him, the afternoon, and when dinner time came he was still their only companion. Long before the shadows of evening came they found that Mr. Archibald was a good deal like fish for breakfast, fish for luncheon and fish for dinner. At the usual hour for dancing the phonograph was set going, and since there was only the hero to dance with and the girls soon tired of dancing with one another they sat around and napped.

The boys came in at 10 o'clock to find all the girls retired to their rooms, and Mr. Archibald had taken the 9:15 train for home. In the morning the girls pouted, while the boys talked of the enjoyable day they had spent at the house.

For a few hours the moping of the girls continued; then, when the boys went out to the tennis courts together, they were followed by a regiment of look of misses who had concluded that the ordinary boys were preferable to the Adonis.

A SOPRANO-TENOR

By NORMAN THORNDYKE

After a number of ventures in a musical-theatrical way I organized a comic opera company, which I took "on the road." My singers were not such as one expects to hear at the Metropolitan Opera House in New York, but were good enough for the audiences they were intended for. When I was examining candidates for my first lady's part a young woman came to me who desired the position. I tried her voice, but could not quite place it. It was not exactly a soprano nor was it exactly an alto, being between the two. Sometimes it sounded a little like a man's tenor. I did not exactly fancy it, but no other woman presented herself for the position except one who wanted too large a salary, and I engaged the applicant. Miss Winifred Richie she gave as her real name and told me that I was at liberty to use it on the bills.

Miss Richie was a very good looking young woman. She was attractive in all respects excepting that in ordinary conversation her voice was pitched rather low for a woman and seemed a trifle harsh. But this did not prevent her turning the heads of several of the male singers. Marionelli, my tenor, whose real name was O'Grady, became desperately smitten with her, and his attentions being not to her liking I was in constant dread of losing one or both of them in the middle of the season and out on the road, where I could not repair the deficiency.

The trouble with O'Grady was that he was not a man of any refinement, and no rebuff could stand him off. One day my leading lady came to me and said that if I did not find a way to relieve her of his attentions she would take the matter into her own hands.

"What course will you take?" I asked. "Will you stick a pin in him?"

"No; I'll stick nothing into him, but he'll get an eye that will keep him off the boards for a week."

I smiled at the idea of a woman repelling a lover in such fashion. Then I asked her in what way O'Grady offended her. She replied that in love scenes on the stage which they were compelled to act together he was much more demonstrative than was necessary in a stage embrace.

I had a talk with O'Grady, in which I told him that Miss Richie would no longer accept his attentions, and unless he would let her alone I would send him off as soon as I could replace him. But my warning was not effective. In the very next performance he offended again. Nothing occurred until the curtain was lowered at the end of the act, when Miss Richie landed a blow on O'Grady's eye that turned it a sickly green.

I was much put out with Miss Richie for incapacitating my tenor and rated her soundly.

"Miss Turnlee, my understudy," she said, "is quite capable of taking my part, and I will take O'Grady's part."

"What?"

"I'll take O'Grady's part. I can sing tenor."

After she had convinced me that she was serious I tried her voice and found that it was a far better tenor than soprano.

"What does this mean?" I asked her.

"It means that I can sing in two different voices."

The next performance was given as she had suggested, Miss Richie being dressed as a man, and she produced a far better impression than O'Grady. Indeed, as a man singer she was of far more value to me than O'Grady or than she was in a soprano's part.

His love for Miss Richie had not been enhanced by the blow he had received from her, and now that he had been discharged on account of it he was in a fury with her. He rushed into the wings and began to abuse her. When she had given him the black eye she had taken him unawares. Now he confronted her as an enemy. But she had the advantage of being untrammelled by skirts and stepped toward him with clinched fists. Naturally averse to such an altercation with a woman he had so recently loved, he retreated. But she followed him up and by a quick stroke landed her fist under his jaw, lifted him on his feet and sent him sprawling on the boards.

Hearing something drop, I ran to the scene of action and prevented any more fighting. I put O'Grady out and told him not to show himself to me or any of my company again.

The next day I made a new contract with Miss Richie, doubling her salary, to sing tenor parts and put her under study permanently in her place. My tenor was soon recognized by a few persons who had seen him in a woman's part, and it began to be whispered that he was Miss Richie and not Signor Marascherio, as he was advertised. The fact that I had a woman singing a man's parts drew the curiosity, and my attendance increased. In time they became so large that I gave my tenor another raise, and finally he was receiving as much in a month as before he had received in a year.

I brought my company back to my starting point when the warm weather came on and disbanded it. I asked Miss Richie if she would sign a contract for the next year, and she agreed to do so on condition that her true sex should be known. Then a secret came out.

Tom Thurston, a good tenor singer who could sing marvelously like a woman in falsetto, hearing that I wanted a soprano, had appeared to me in woman's garb and applied for the place as Miss Richie.

Captured by a Cruiser

By DONALD CHAMBERLIN

When the great world's war opened several German cruisers broke through the cordon of British ships in the North sea and began to rove the seas, sinking any allied vessel they met. The most famous of these was the Emden, and she continued the work better than any other privateer.

During the first year of the war I was acting as chief engineer of the British ship Tommy Atkins, running between London and Valparaiso. It wasn't long before the German cruisers made themselves evident in the south Atlantic, and after crossing the equator we began to fear we might fall into the hands of some one of them. Sure enough, one day we saw black smoke on the horizon which grew plainer every hour, and we soon made up our minds that she was coming toward us.

She proved to be the Emden, and when she came near enough to us she fired a shot across our bows, and a few minutes later I got a signal to stop the engine. An officer from the cruiser came aboard and directed every one to get ready to be removed to his ship. He came down into the engine room, where I was waiting in case I was wanted there, and, seeing me, he asked me if I was the engineer. I told him I was, and he ordered me on deck and put me in charge of a sailor, who took me aboard of the cruiser. When I saw the officer again he told me that one of their engineers had died of a fever, another had broken an arm and they were short of engineers. I must take one of the periods of running the vessel.

In a couple of days we fell in with an Austrian bark bound for a German port, and all the passengers and crew except me were put aboard of her, for our ship had been sent to the bottom as soon as we were transferred to the Emden. It was a sad sight for me, seeing the others leave the Emden, and I forced to remain and work for the enemy. But what could I do?

From the moment the last boat left the Emden for the other vessel I began to think how I could escape a service that was undesirable in that it was for an enemy.

We were moving down the Brazilian coast, sometimes within a few miles of land. My watch, or period of duty, had been changed from night to day, for I was breaking down under the strain, and it was one night when I was supposed to be asleep that I laid my plans.

One of the crew had died the day before and was laid out for burial. Beside him was the sack in which he was to be sent to the bottom. It occurred to me that if I could get rid of him and put myself in the sack I would be thrown overboard. Land had been in sight during the day, and I, being a good swimmer, might keep myself on the surface long enough to be picked up by some passing boat.

It would probably result in death, but I preferred to take the chance rather than remain in the enforced service. I, a Briton, to be the slave of a German! Better a hundred deaths!

At first the Germans kept a close watch on me, but gradually they grew lax. I could do nothing harmful which would not react on myself as well as on them. Every one about me was sound asleep. Those on deck were wide awake, but all below, tired with the heavy duties, were glad to sleep when relieved.

I arose, went to the corpse, put it on my shoulder, carried it to the ship's side and through an open space dropped it overboard. I next stole a knife from a sleeping sailor without waking him. Then I got into the burial sack and awaited my fate.

By this time I had learned a little German, and in the morning I heard a voice: "Where is Hans? He was not out in the bag." I heard a footstep coming toward me and felt a hand grip my shoulder. "Here he is," said the man who gripped me. "Some one must have put him in. But he is not sewed up. That must be done at once. Schneider, come here."

Some one came and sewed up the sack. Very soon after this I was carried to the forward deck. There was some kind of service, but I did not know enough of the German language to determine what it was. Then I felt the board on which I was placed tilted, and I slid into cold water.

I must have gone down forty feet and was thinking that I would never stop when my feet struck bottom. This encouraged me, for the shallow water indicated that I was near land. I cut off the weight that pulled me down and finished freeing myself by cutting my way out of the sack; then, bracing my foot against the sand, I rose rapidly to the surface. The first thing I did on getting my head above water was to look for the cruiser. Seeing her some 500 yards from me, I drew a long breath and ducked to give her time to get farther away.

When I looked again, there, a couple of miles away, was the South American coast. The sea was calm, and I hoped to be able to swim the distance, though I was weak from overwork. I struck out slowly and soon came to a piece of driftwood. On this I rested for some time, then swam about half a mile. I was too weak to accomplish the task and would have drowned had not a small fishing boat passed near me. The skipper picked me up, and eventually I was landed on the Brazilian coast.

After all, I was more lucky than my comrades on the Atkins, who were taken to Germany and kept for more than a year as prisoners.

Lost on the Mountain Side

By ETHEL HOLMES

"Anything for me today, Sam?" asked a girl of a rural postman trudging along a road in Tennessee.

"Yes; I reckon I got one for you, Susie," said the man, looking over a bundle of letters he carried in his hand. Not finding it, he dived down into his bag and pulled out its contents, which he examined carefully.

"Well, now, that knocks me out," he said, with troubled and puzzled expression on his face. "When I sorted the letters for my route at the post-office I sure saw one for you."

"And it's gone?" cried the girl in a frightened tone.

"Wait till I look 'em over again."

He examined every letter again and with the same result as before. He scratched his head in thought.

"I stopped at the tavern for something to warm me and threw my bag down on a chair."

"Oh, Sam! Was there any one in the room with you?"

"Let me see. There was a lean, hungry looking man in spectacles."

"And a red beard?"

"Pears to me he had a red beard."

The girl turned and ran away from the postman, who followed her with his eyes till she was out of sight.

Susie Barker, the girl in question, ran till she came to the tavern. There she stopped and asked the landlord which way the man with a red beard had gone. He had departed immediately after the postman had gone in the direction of the Cumberland plateau, the base of which was but a mile distant.

Susie set out at a run, but she could not keep such a pace and soon settled into a hurried walk. A short distance from the foothills she saw the man she was after ascending the hill. She knew the trails leading up to the plateau and struck into one that was shorter than that the man was taking. She had not gone far before the two paths crossed. Sitting down on a stone, she waited for him to come to her.

"Howdy," she said to the stranger when he came up.

"Howdy," replied the man, scrutinizing the girl. "You're not lost, are y'?"

"Well, I dunno. I come up hyer to find a gal I know, and I thort she lived purty nigh this place, but I don't find her somehow. I ain't used to these mountings. I never come up this way."

She looked exhausted and troubled. She was very plainly dressed, but was rather comely for a rough country girl.

"Is there anything I can do for you?" he asked.

"Nothin', unless you can put me on the track to find my friend I'm lookin' for. But maybe you're a stranger in these parts yerself."

The man looked uneasy. He had good reason to shake the girl, but did not exactly know how to go about it.

"You're right there. I don't see how I can help you, since I'm not familiar with the country about here."

The girl looked about her with troubled glances. The man started to go on.

"Yer not goin' to leave a pore gal out hyer on this lonely hillside, air y'?" she said, looking at him reproachfully.

"I don't see how I can help it," said the man. "I don't know where you want to go, and I've got to get on myself."

"D' y' mind my goin' on with y'?" she asked pitifully.

"Well, I don't see how I can do that," was the reply, "seem' that I'll have to walk a great deal faster than you can."

"Try me."

The man looked perplexed. He couldn't very well leave a girl who was lost on the mountain side, and in the business in which he was engaged she would be an obstacle to him. Indeed, he could not very well accomplish it without getting rid of her.

"I haven't time to bother with you," he said crabbedly. "All you got to do is to go down the mountain and you'll find plenty of persons to tell you how to get home."

With that he started on, but, hearing a sob, turned and saw the girl with her hands to her face, shaking convulsively.

There is no weapon so powerful as a woman's tears. The man turned and went back to the girl. He did not get away from her for an hour. First he spent a good deal of time soothing her. Then she told him that she had sprained her ankle and could not walk. Finally footsteps were heard coming from above, and a young man appeared on the trail. He started on seeing the girl and the man.

"I reckon," said the girl to the man with the red beard, "that this feller will take me down. Much obliged to you all the same."

The man addressed looked the other over and without a word started up the trail. The two watched him till he was out of sight, then the girl threw her arm around the newcomer.

"He's got the letter you wrote me. I reckoned it had the way to find you laid down purty clear, hadn't it?"

"Yes, it had."

"He tuk it from the postman. I followed him and have been delayin' him hyer, hopin' to find some way to warn you."

"Well, he'll get the still, but he won't get me."

Clasped in each other's arms, they rejoiced that the delay she had caused had saved him from arrest and perhaps a term of imprisonment.

"Better give up makin' whisky, Ben," she said.

"I'll do it for your sake."

The Eight Vital Tools.

"Under the title of 'Repair Shop,' C. I. Guinness, a Massachusetts machinery expert, lists the following tools as invaluable on every farm. The chest includes rip saw, cross-cut saw, steel square, claw hammer, jack plane, block plane, spirit level, brace, and set of auger bits. Many other tools might be mentioned, but with those listed practically all the necessary farm carpenter work can be done."—Farm and Fireside.

Reasons!

Why you should use Cardui, the woman's tonic, for your troubles, have been shown in thousands of letters from actual users of this medicine, who speak from personal experience. If the results obtained by other women for so many years have been so uniformly good, why not give Cardui a trial?

E. B. RAY
DEMOCRATIC CANDIDATE for ASSESSOR

Remember Mr. Taxpayer when you go to pay your taxes this fall that if it had not been for the work of Mr. E. B. Ray, who is now a candidate for assessor, before the State Board of Supervisors, that all of Garrard County land would have been five per cent higher than the present valuation.
The Board had made the raise of five per cent for our county and Lige went along before them and made such a splendid argument in our behalf that the raise was taken off and thereby every holder of real estate in the county was benefited. As Mr Ray did so well as deputy Assessor there is no telling how much good he will do for you when elected Assessor. This is a time when we need men of experience and ability in all the county officers and all taxpayers should consider these matters when they come to vote in November.

EXEMPTION BOARD
Completes Work And Certifies Full Quota.

The Garrard county Exemption Board has certified to the District Board, Garrard county's full quota of men for the Selective Draft numbering a total of 114 men, from a total of 300 examined.

This is a splendid record as many counties have not yet completed their work and have examined many more men than was done by our local board. There yet remains a great deal of detail work to be done by the board which may keep them in session at least until the last man has been ordered to report at the Cantonment.

RESOLUTIONS

Of Garrard County Institute.

We, the teachers of Garrard County, assembled in institute in Lancaster, Ky. Resolve that—

One—A vote of thanks be extended to our very capable superintendent, Miss Higgins, who in her quiet, unobtrusive way has formulated and put into execution the plan which has given to us the very best session in the history of our institute.

Two—That thanks be extended also to Prof. Hopkins for his most efficient services as chairman, to him who has made the county teachers feel that he is indeed a friend and brother in the profession and for the interest which he has manifested in high schools of the county which will contribute toward making the schools of Garrard County one harmonious whole.

Three—That we extend thanks to Prof. George Colvin for the very earnestness with which he has tried to inspire us to a realization of the responsibility for the lives entrusted to our care, and that we solemnly pledge ourselves to take these truths together with the beautiful thoughts they inspire, and to examine our own hearts to the end that we may become broader minded and better leaders for the future citizens of Kentucky.

Four—That we thank Mrs. Gillingham for her very helpful work in music, physical culture and games, who has by her enthusiasm inspired us to greater efforts, and that we do our utmost to fulfill her wish that we give a patriotic program in the near future.

Five—To Miss Noland for her helpful work with the very young teachers in the one room schools.

Six—To Mrs Tomlinson who so ably and faithfully presided at the piano.

Seven—To Mrs Kinnaird who in behalf of the W. C. T. U. made us welcome.

Eight—To the Womens Club for an invitation to their reading room.

Nine—To Mr Rogers for a very helpful talk on agriculture.

Ten—To the program committee, the secretary and any others who have contributed in any way to make this institute a success.

Resolved 2—That we, as a body of teachers extend sympathy and condole with the people of Garrard county in the loss of Eld. F. M. Tinder from the county. That we thank Bro. Tinder for the splendid program given in this building Thursday evening, and also thank him for his presence and inspiration at this and all former sessions of our institute as well as other school meetings during the past fourteen years.

Resolved 3—Realizing that there is a lack of patriotism in our state partly due to lack of instruction along these lines, we resolve to teach with more zeal to the end that future generations may enjoy nation wide prohibition, and so become better citizens and patriots.

Resolved 4: That we as teachers of the grammar grades and high school of the county put forth special efforts toward keeping our pupils in school, and to encourage their thorough completion of the high school course and to zealously recommend their attendance at college in the future, in order that education may be promoted in Ky.

Resolved 5: That each teacher subscribe for, and read at least one school journal, and study at least one of the reading circle books.

Resolved 6: That we do hereby petition the state legislators of Kentucky that they enact such laws as will make it possible for a teacher to receive his money at the end of each school month.

Resolved 7: That we extend thanks to the "Central Record" for the courtesy of the press, and request that these resolutions be printed there in.

Death in Life.
What we call "death" is, after all, merely the culmination, premature or natural, of the dying that is going on within us each minute. Every blow we strike, every thought we think, is accompanied by the death of a certain amount of muscular or nervous tissue. In health the "death" is followed by new life—the tissue is renewed. There is no more pain in the death of the whole physical organism than there is in the death of one cell.—London Answer.

Could Do Better Herself.
"Don't you think you have a good mamma to spread such nice large slices of bread with jam?" asked little Ethel's grandma. "Oh, I don't know," replied the little miss; "she'd be a heap sight gooder if she'd let me spread the jam myself."

Cross at Both Ends.
Peggy, who lives on a farm, will some day be a skilled horsewoman. At present her pet is a lively young colt, whose disposition is not of the best. When strangers approach he will both bite and kick. "Be careful," Peggy warned a young visitor the other day, "that colt is cross at both ends!"

Sunday Walking Was Illegal.
In England during 1680 two men were found guilty of the crime of walking from Bristol to Bath on Sunday and were fined 20 shillings ($4.80) each. The only traders allowed to travel in England at that time were milkmen. At the present time railroads have provided a special Sunday schedule, excursions, etc., in order to accommodate the travelling public.

To Compute Hours of Daylight.
If you want to know how much of the day is daylight and how much darkness at any time in the year, double the hour when the sun sets, and you will have approximately the number of hours of daylight; or double the hour when the sun rises, and you have the hours of darkness.—Youth's Companion.

There is no secret in the notably long life of the Columbus wagon. It is the result of the methods employed in construction. There is no wood in this wagon which has not been air-dried under shelter from one to two years. The axles and the spokes of the wheels are hickory; the hounds, bolsters and sandboards are oak, and the bottom of the box is straight grained flawless pine. These are just a few examples of the care which is taken to make this wagon as reliable as possible. The result is that the Columbus wagon is unbeatable in reliability and endurance. An Embarrassing Mistake

By OSCAR COX

Ricketts first saw her at an evening concert. She was listening to the soft strains of a sonata. There was dreaminess in her pose. Her eyes seemed to be looking at heavenly visions. Whether or not she was beautiful, she was certainly spiritual.

After that he haunted concerts for months, hoping that he might meet her. He did not. But one Sunday morning, passing a cathedral, he concluded to go in for the service. His entrance was at the moment of the elevation of the host. All was silent; then the three soft strokes intended to concentrate the minds of the congregation upon the solemn service. On the other side of the church was the girl he sought. She was kneeling, and her Madonna-like face seemed to glow in a light from heaven.

The next time he saw her he was very fortunate. He was spinning through the park in his runabout. Suddenly a car coming from the opposite direction swept past him. As by a lightning flash he caught an instantaneous glimpse of his divine face. An old gentleman sat beside her, and she was looking at him with the tenderness of a daughter who idolized him.

Ricketts pulled up so suddenly that he nearly went through the glass wind shield, then turned. The road was narrow, and he was obliged to go forward and back several times before he could get around. He succeeded barely in time to see the object that held him in thrall carried around a corner. He went around that corner on two wheels and at the risk of his life. Later he saw the car he followed pull up before a handsome stone front residence. The girl helped out the old man and supported him into the house. Ricketts noted the number and drove on.

By this time the worshiper was beside himself with a desire to know, to possess, the object of his adoration. But he was deterred by conventionalities. There seemed no possible hope of an introduction. Might he not act through her father? He could call at the house, ask for the old man, tell him that he had seen his daughter and desired to know her.

Urged on by impatient love, he adopted this plan. One afternoon he appeared at the house where he had seen his innamorata alight and rang the bell. The Madonna girl answered the summons. Ricketts was taken flat aback. He stammered a query if the gentleman of the house were at home. She said that he was, but seldom saw any one. If Ricketts would state his business she would see. Ricketts said that he wished to see the gentleman upon a private matter which might have important results for both of them and one other. The girl went away with the message and, presently returning, invited Ricketts to follow her. He did so in fear and trembling, walking as though he feared some one might hear his step.

On entering the room where the old man was Ricketts saw him in an easy chair, propped up with pillows. The girl handed him an ear trumpet; then, instead of leaving the two together, she stood near her father, ready to minister to him during the coming interview.

An old man with an ear trumpet, into which Ricketts must shout his request for one who was present and could hear every word even if spoken in a low tone! Ricketts was not up to such a test. If he had had his wits about him he might have invented some reason for his call other than the real one, even if it were only that he had come to sell plasters for a weak back. But Ricketts lost his head completely. He could think of no substitute for his real object and made a mess of the truth.

"I have called, sir," he began, "to say to you—"

"Louder, please!"

"I have called, sir, though a stranger to you—"

"I can't hear you; you must raise your voice."

"Great heavens!" exclaimed Ricketts mentally. "How can I prepare him for what I have to say? Briefness is terrible in this case, but I must be brief." Then he dashed at his announcement as a regiment of soldiers would storm a fortification.

"I love your daughter!" he shouted.

"What?"

"I want to marry your daughter!" yelled Ricketts, coming nearer with every statement to the object he had in view.

That is the worst of saying anything to deaf persons; it is so hard to make them hear that one has to cut it short.

"I haven't any daughter."

Ricketts started as though a mule had kicked him in the abdomen. His eyes darted inquiringly at the Madonna-like creature who was taking this all in. Had it not been for his tell-tale eyes she might not have understood the situation. As it was, she did.

"You don't hear right, dear," she said, putting her lips very near the horn. "The gentleman says he has got into the wrong house and has apologized for his mistake."

Ricketts understood. He had been asking an old man for his young wife. Red and white by turns, he arose and beat a retreat. The "girl," a nearer view of whom indicated a woman near thirty, followed him to the door. As he bewilderingly bowed himself out she gave him a smile.

A year later the old man died, and Ricketts married his widow.

A Railroad's Share in Southern Industry

Haulage Record—Freight and Passenger

NO BETTER evidence of the service rendered the people of the South by the L. & N. can be offered than the figures showing the liberal appreciation accorded L. & N. service by the people.

During the past sixteen years the L. & N. has carried 167,560,742 passengers, a number of people equal to the total population of North and South America combined. The number of passengers carried one mile in sixteen years was 6,831,186,990, about four times the population of the earth. The revenue received from five billions of those passengers had to be paid out for the operation of the trains.

The total number of tons of freight carried in sixteen years was 414,340,026, and these figures speak eloquently of the part played by L. & N. service in the South's development.

The number of tons carried one mile was 70,773,607,021. The revenue received from forty-six billion tons had to be paid out for the operation of the trains.

During sixteen years the L. & N. has transported 9,800,000 bales of cotton, 207,000,000 bushels of corn, 125,302,800 bushels of wheat, 26,907,065 tons of lumber, 57,637,354 tons of ore, 20,519,355 tons of coke, 133,796,950 tons of coal and 86,309,672 tons of merchandise and manufactured articles.

Since the prosperity of the country is, and must be measured by the ability of the railroads to transport its commerce, it will readily be seen what a prominent part the L. & N. has taken in the development and prosperity of the South, especially when it is remembered that 96 per cent. of L. & N. mileage is in the South. The L. & N. may be relied upon to continue to maintain the high standard of service rendered the South, and asks the sympathy, understanding and co-operation of the people of the South.

It is estimated that about two-thirds of all the letters carried by the postal service of the world are written, sent to and read by English-speaking people.

Powers of Imagination.

When a fellow is in love he can see poetry in every return snap of her jaw as she mangles a wad of chewing gum.—Pittsburgh Post.

Origin of Minerals.

According to one account, Gerbert, afterwards Pope Sylvester II, learned the use of the numerals from the Moors in Spain in the tenth century. Another account is that Leonardo of Pisa introduced them from the East into Italy about 1202. The use of them was not general until the invention of printing.

Feminine Fortitude.

I have often had occasion to remark the fortitude with which women sustain the most overwhelming reverses of fortune. Those disasters which break down the spirit of a man and prostrate him in the dust seem to call forth all the energies of the softer sex, and give such intrepidity and elevation to their character, that at times it approaches to sublimity.—Washington Irving.

Early Indiana Raised Corn.

The white man found corn in use by the Indians in Virginia. In most other countries it is known as maize, and in English texts it is referred to as Indian corn. When the snow is on the Illinois corn fields, the Argentine corn fields are ripening. The largest producing areas are in the United States, Mexico, Austria-Hungary and Italy.

A Few Wild Turkey Facts.

There are three varieties of wild turkeys, the Mexican, North American and Honduras. The Honduras is a native of the tropics and has a plumage equal in brilliancy to that of the peacock. Attempts to domesticate this turkey have not been successful. The domestic turkeys have been developed from the Mexican and North American varieties.

On Floor of the Ocean.

It is believed that to an enormous extent the bed of the ocean is covered with lava and pumice stone. Still more remarkable is it to find the floor of the ocean covered in many parts with the dust of meteorites. These bodies whirl about in the heavens like miniature comets, and are for the most part broken into innumerable fragments.

I'll Give $50 On Your Boy's Military Training

To further do my "bit" for my country and some good, worthy boys, I'm going to give $50 toward the military training of each of 10 more boys who attend the Columbia Military Academy, of Columbia, Tenn., on my recommendation. I have already given up one of my partners to my country's service. He goes as a commissioned officer because of the thorough training he received in this school.

Your boy can be one of these ten if he is between the ages of 14 and 19 and has passed the Seventh Grade in the Public School. He is certain to have to see military service. In this school he will be fitted for a commissioned officer, with the good pay and chances of promotion of an officer.

He will be under the supervision and instruction of such noted educators as Dr. Ira Landrith, Col. O. C. Huilvey and others of national note. His board and tuition for the first year will be only $470. I pay $50 of that. Books, clothing, etc., should not exceed $75 or $80. Write me at once, giving name, schooling and two references, and I will forward catalogue and fuller particulars. THOMAS E. BASHAM, President, Thomas E.
